South Side Historic District

The South Side Historic District preserves a vibrant, mixed-use neighborhood in the southwestern quadrant of Sacramento's original 1848 street grid. The gradual influx of residents to South Side led to the establishment of the Southside Improvement Association around 1900. By 1907, the City's Board of Trustees had approved plans for the creation of Southside Park, which were to be carried out by architect Rudolf Herold, engineer George Randal, and landscape architect John McLaren, designer of San Francisco's Golden Gate Park. The design of Southside Park was influenced by the nineteenth-century principles of urban planning and park development exhibited by the works of Frederick Law Olmsted and his contemporaries. The completed park covered eight city blocks, totaling 26 acres in size.

A massive building boom in South Side marked the years that followed. The majority of the newly subdivided parcels were developed for modestly scaled homes in architectural styles characteristic of the period, such as the Craftsman and Classical Revival styles. South Side was an attractive location for local residents who were vacating Sacramento's overcrowded city center. Additionally, because South Side was one of the few neighborhoods where racial covenants did not restrict homeownership, it was settled by the many immigrant and ethnic groups that arrived in Sacramento during the first half of the twentieth century. By the 1920s, South Side could already be characterized as a multicultural neighborhood. The area's unique cultural milieu brought about the construction of many churches and societal halls that contributed to the neighborhood's architectural character.

While many of South Side's earliest inhabitants were Irish immigrants, it was primarily a neighborhood of Portuguese and Italian immigrants prior to the 1950s. The local Portuguese community was centered around 3rd and T streets. Its cultural and spiritual heart were the ODES Hall (Ordem do Divino Espirito Santo, or Order of the Divine Holy Spirit) at 514 W Street and St. Elizabeth's Church at the corner of 12th and S Street. Italians settled along S and T streets as far east as 19th Street and attended St. Mary's Church, which was originally located at 8th and N and relocated to the corner of 7th and T streets in 1915.

A new influx of ethnic groups flowed into the South Side neighborhood in the 1950s as a result of the redevelopment of Sacramento's West End, located immediately to the north. Many displaced Japanese, Chinese, Latino, and African American residents relocated to South Side during this period. A Mexican community grew along 4th and 5th streets, southward toward Y Street (now Broadway). The community centered around El Centro Mexicano, dedicated in 1948 and located next to Southside Park at 6th and W streets, and Our Lady of Guadalupe Church, built in 1958 at 711 T Street.

The period of significance for the South Side Historic District begins with the inauguration of streetcar service down 10th Street to Y Street in 1871 and ends when demolition for the construction of Highway 50 began in 1965. The district has an expansive period of significance to incorporate the area's initial period of physical development as well as the significant physical and demographic changes that took place in the mid-twentieth century, which contribute to the unique architectural character and cultural significance of the district.

Architectural Styles: Italianate, Queen Anne, Stick/Eastlake, Folk Victorian, Colonial Revival, Classical Revival, Classic Box, Tudor, Beaux Arts, French Eclectic, Italian Renaissance, Mission, Spanish Eclectic, Mediterranean Revival, Prairie, Craftsman, Minimal Traditional, Art Deco, Streamline Moderne, Late Moderne, Mid-Century Modern, Googie/Exaggerated Modern, Vernacular, Commercial Styles: (One-Part Commercial Block, Two-Part Commercial Block)
