What is EV Blueprint Implementation?

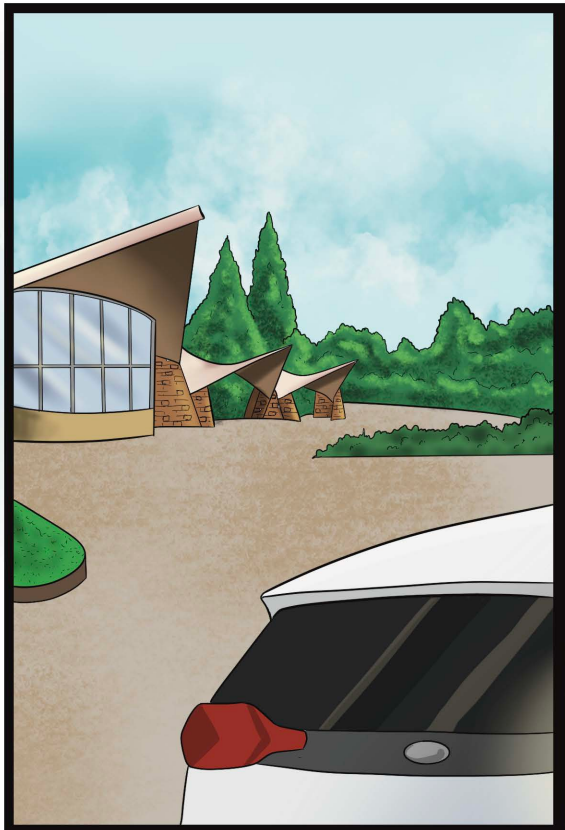

“In 2017, Sacramento City Council embarked on a bold initiative to have 75,000 zero-emission vehicles on the road. Electric vehicles will reduce air pollution and noise pollution, and help people save money on fuel. To make this goal a reality, Sacramento did the research, talked to residents and businesses, and evaluated different forms of electric transportation—personal cars, shared cars, on-demand shuttle buses, and electric bikes—and then turned ideas into reality. Today, Sacramento is a leader in electric transportation and is the first in the nation to launch electric mobility hubs with EV cars, electric trikes, and charging stations that all Sacramento residents can use. This is a story about one Sacramentan and how electric transportation helps her be in charge of her destiny.”
